Dear President Obama,

Congratulating you for the most prestigious honor, I want also to thank you for this e-mail convincing me that you are devoted to rebuild both the internal USA affairs according to the American national values well defined by the Founding Fathers so that the world position of the USA would be again that for which the free world accepted its leadership after the Second World War: honesty, devotion to freedom, peace, equal rights, for the goodness of all people doing fairly, and for all peoples caring these eternal values. With this hope and belief in you, I wish the full success in this your mission.

Respectfully yours,

Lyubomir T. Gruyitch

Subject: A call to action

Friend --

This morning, Michelle and I awoke to some surprising and humbling news. At 6 a.m., we received word that I'd been awarded the Nobel Peace Prize for 2009.

To be honest, I do not feel that I deserve to be in the company of so many of the transformative figures who've been honored by this prize -- men and women who've inspired me and inspired the entire world through their courageous pursuit of peace.

But I also know that throughout history the Nobel Peace Prize has not just been used to honor specific achievement; it's also been used as a means to give momentum to a set of causes.

That is why I've said that I will accept this award as a call to action, a call for all nations and all peoples to confront the common challenges of the 21st century. These challenges won't all be met during my presidency, or even my lifetime. But I know these challenges can be met so long as it's recognized that they will not be met by one person or one nation alone.

This award -- and the call to action that comes with it -- does not belong simply to me or my administration; it belongs to all people around the world who have fought for justice and for peace. And most of all, it belongs to you, the men and women of America, who have dared to hope and have worked so hard to make our world a little better.

So today we humbly recommit to the important work that we've begun together. I'm grateful that you've stood with me thus far, and I'm honored to continue our vital work in the years to come.

Thank you,

President Barack Obama
